WOMAN SETTLES CASE FOR MORE THAN ONE YEAR SALARY AGAINST TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ADMINISTRATION (TSA)

A Transportation Security Officer (TSO) Authority settled her sexual harassment and retaliation case against the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) at one of the New York/New Jersey Airports.

In 2010 she complained about sexual harassment of a Supervisor and further complained that nothing was being done to remedy the situation. She was forced to take her complaint to an outside agency. She was then subjected to retaliation concerning her performance evaluations, assignments and was generally subjected to a hostile work environment

As it was clear in the complaint, TSA Management knew about the inappropriate and illegal behavior towards female employees and failed to take any remedial action.

Plaintiff was represented by Philip Taubman of Taubman Kimelman & Soroka, LLP., one of the best known employment law firms in New York. Mr. Taubman stated, “ The practice of rewards for sex and turning the other way when sexual harassment takes place at the Airports, seems to be the norm in dealing with the TSA approach to the large number of female employees who serve the flying public as Transportation Security Officers. It is time that they received the respect that they are entitled to.”
